"I may even him the grown-up bables, too," she smiled.

Miss Turner is 24 and very good to look at, although not a fispner. By no means, she made at passed describes to be made out a fiapper. Deliver har? She there to dance, and make dates, at cetera are said, but fiaping—well, that was comothing else again.

Serious Young Woman.

She really is a serious miss, despite, her external buoyancy. She is an attorney, with an office down town, and she is determined to be elected to the state legislature. She won the democratic nomination easily.

easiy.
Asked what is her political plat-form, she replied quickly:
"Fawer laws and better laws"

"Fewer laws and better laws"
"There are two many joiss laws—too many laws that can't be enforced." Miss Turner explained.
"We need more school teachers and lawyers in the legislature to look out for jokers in the laws that are passed. We need less laws, and those should be written so that they could be enforced."
Did she think the Volstead law was in the "schoolfot-have-beenpassed" class? Nothing—not one word on that subject.
Was she a "wet" ar a "dry"? No linwer.

"It's a personal problem with a woman how long she wears her skirts," she replied.

She will go to the legislature, if elected, with no "isma" whatever, she said. That if a girl wants to smoke I don't see how you are going to stop her by passing a law. There should he more personal supervision."

Miss Turner revealed that the first augustation that she enter polities came while she was a student at the Kansas City school of law. During a discussion among seniors one day a male student remarked that he did not think women should enter late provoked warm fetorts, and that he did not think women should enter late politics, "hereause though one student said to Miss Turner:

"Why don't you run for office, "I will—first chance," Miss Turner flashed back.

Asked how her felks took to the idea of her entering politics, she said:

"Not very well at first. Mother votes, but that's ail. She's of the good, old-fashined type, At first school of alway."
